Abstract

In the last three decades, a new approach to the study of medieval and early modern European courts has been developed by applying several new methodologies. One of the aspects receiving the most attention is court space. Its significant element was so called Royal Geographies, referring to properties that belonged to the ruling dynasty. These spaces set new trends in art, fashion and education, constituted a diverse, global network that made royal power more visible and effective, and, perhaps most importantly, served as centres of power that helped to shape early modern European monarchies. The talk will present the general evolution of the system of Royal Geographies of the Spanish monarchy all over Europe and in other continents, such as America or Asia, from the Late Middle Ages to the end of the 17th century, and the role they played in shaping the image of rulers and dynasties.

José Eloy Hortal Muñoz is Associate Professor of Early Modern History at the University Rey Juan Carlos in Madrid, Spain. His main research interests are the political history of the Habsburg Netherlands at the XVIth and XVIIth centuries, the Courts of Brussels and Madrid at both centuries, the royal guards of the Spanish Habsburgs and, lastly, the royal sites and geographies.
